Helen's beautiful face was said to have launched a thousand ships. She was the wife of Menelaus, the king of Sparta. Of course, the fact that she was married didn't bother Paris at all; he was a married man as well. But Paris had fallen in love with Helen and, married or not, he wanted her. (Sounds a bit like the Rossetti/Morris situation, no?)

Reflection is a means of surfacing experiential knowledge, and students may begin to use reflection as their experience of nursing accumulates. As Carper was a key figure in widening that knowledge accepted as knowing in nursing beyond the empirical, it is both justified and recommended that her work should be incorporated into reflective practice.
